Her manufactures cover a wide field and variety, and rank with the best of their kind. More of the world should know it.

Her railroads form a perfect netof common carriers, and her navigable streams add strength to the arteries of commerce. More of the world should know it.

She stands to-day the most inviting spot on the globe for capital, and much capital now seeking investment doesn't know it.

In the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, in 1904, is offered the opportunity to show the world what Kentucky has. There lies the chance to put the State to the forefront for what she really is.

While not wishing to snuff the candlelight of primitive days or wipe out one lots of sentiment that clusters around the illustrious past, still there is a New Kentucky that is overshadowing all else. The rays of a twentieth century sun are breaking through the State's roof.

For the purpose of presenting to to the world a true picture of the New Kentucky, the Kentucky Exhibit Association has been organized. The failure of the General Assembly, at its last session, to make an appropriation for a Kentucky building and a full display of Kentucky's products and resources at this Universal Exposition left the State without a leg to stand on in the great race for Statehood commercial and industrial supremacy. Public-spirited citizens have undertaken to supply the State in this emergency not only with legs to stand on, but with wing-tipped sandals so it may be Begin with the first thought little Blaine and has moved to it. more fleet of foot than sister Commonwealths.

And there is reason to believe that Kentucky is to have a better building and a better exhibit than treatment.
